A Hands-On Making Experience Transforming Local Waste

FREE TICKETS FOR LOCAL SCHOOLS

To book your 1.5hour slot for up to 15 students, email: xenia@blackhorseworkshop.co.uk

Plaster Works is an innovative public making experience focusing on the hidden potential of local building waste, by showcasing the design potential of recycled plasterboard. Good Waste and Blackhorse Workshop have developed a process to extract the plaster powder to create a new material with many practical applications.

Coinciding with the UN Climate Change COP 26 summit in November, we'll be hosting free facilitated learning experiences for local students to gain an insight into the potential value of waste materials through making.

Participants will crush, mix and create their own unique material to mould into their own decorative bowls. Through hands-on activities, students will learn from material designers Good Waste about the circular economy and the power community projects have to create behavioural change.
